

Friday Faith Reflection #19 (19 June)

This Friday Faith Reflection will be the last

Recall about a week or so ago there was a 14 year old boy with autism that was lost in the bush near Mount Disappointment. It was awing that so many people came together; volunteers and family. They searched for a few days and nights. Thank God that there was good news that he was found safe and well. This is an important reminder that there are so many good people around us prepared to help. They are everywhere. The boy with autism may feel awed that so many people were willing to help find him.

I think that sometimes we can focus on one thing and forget about other things going on. Then something like this happens and we are reminded to look around more. Become more aware of what God gives us or guides us to do in our lives. So let us take on these tasks, find good that we can do for others. Don't focus on the negative of others, just give what you can and be grateful. Plus when someone does something for you, whether it's big or small, be grateful. Value its true worth! I hope you can reflect on the importance of this. I hope you're safe at home.
